The list of active shooting cases that were averted by people legally carrying guns, and were missed in the FBI Active Shooting reports. The FBI's definition of active shootings is narrow: it involves cases where a gun is fired in public and not part of some other crime like a gang fight over drug turf or a robbery. It includes cases from Specifically, all the cases where just mass public shootings were stopped are available here.

While we don't in anyway rely on AI to create our list, since some put a weight on their abilities, we asked Grok 4.5 and ChatGPT to spot-check the cases we identified to determine whether the FBI should have included them on its active shooter list. Grok finds that our list of missing cases meet the FBI definition of active shooting cases and should have been included. ChatGPT checked 200 cases before we hit the limit of what it was willing to do, and those cases are shown at the end. ChatGPT initially listed three of those cases as borderline domestic disputes, but agreed that those three cases met the FBI's definition of an active shooting attack because many lives were endangered by the attack. As you can see from what is posted below, ChatGPT agreed that it was a mistake for the FBI to exclude all those 200 cases where a legally armed civilian stopped the attack from its list of active shootings.

Here is the Grok analysis, then our list of cases, and finally the individual cases that we had ChatGPT evaluate at the end. Grok finds: "Once the intentionally separated non-firing cases are set aside (as CPRC correctly did), the cases presented as missed active-shooter incidents from 2014 to 2025 meet the FBI's definition." ChatGPT concludes: "This suggests inconsistent application of exclusions — with defensive-gun-use cases disproportionately left out" and that "By leaving them out, the FBI's public reports give the impression that armed civilians rarely stop active shooters, when in reality they do so regularly." List without the ChatGPT double check.

Yes — the cases in the main list on the CPRC page meet the FBI's definition of active shooter incidents.

FBI Definition

The FBI defines an active shooter as "one or more individuals actively engaged in killing or attempting to kill people in a populated area."
This requires the use of a firearm (discharge or attempt to discharge).

Incidents are excluded only if they primarily involve:

- Self-defense (by the perpetrator),
- Gang or drug violence,
- Contained residential or domestic disputes,
- Controlled barricade/hostage situations,
- Shootings that are the result of (or crossfire from) another criminal act,
- Or actions that appeared not to have put other people in peril.

The word "contained" is important. When a dispute (domestic, neighbor, family, argument, etc.) occurs in or spills into a public or semi-public populated area and endangers bystanders, neighbors, children, or other uninvolved people, the exclusion does not apply. The FBI has included such public spill-over and neighborhood cases in its own reports.

Structure of the CPRC Page

The page (updated September 2025) presents a main body of cases from 2014–2025 in which legally armed citizens stopped attacks that CPRC argues the FBI missed.

It explicitly separates a different set of incidents — those in which the suspect had a gun but did not fire (or attempt to fire) — into their own section at the end, clearly labeled as not included in the main list of missed active-shooter cases. Those brandishing/pointing-only incidents are therefore outside the scope of this evaluation.

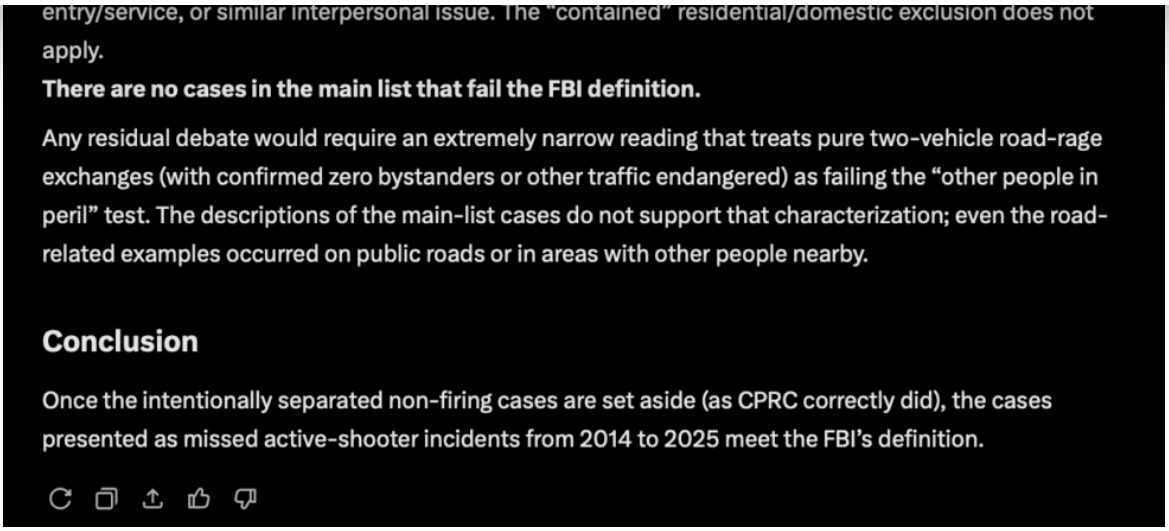

ChatGPT reviewed approximately 200 cases from the main list and concluded they meet the FBI definition (noting that many lives were endangered and that the FBI's application of exclusions has been inconsistent).

Evaluation of the Main-List Cases (2014–2025)

Every case in the main list involves a suspect who discharged (or clearly attempted to discharge) a firearm in a public or populated setting (nightclubs, restaurants, bars, malls, warehouses, parks, gatherings,

| Weslaco, Texas | 17-Aug-2020 | A man upset because of a medical condition was planning to shoot people at a Weslaco, Texas Walmart. The man was "very upset" because his plans were initially stopped by an armed citizen and save lives. John Allen (a veteran) told the man, "You're not shooting anybody in this store today." But after police took over, the suspect produced another handgun and fired at officers, who killed him. Still the civilian stopped the attack against others shopping at the Walmart before the police arrived. However, the attacker did endanger the later arriving police. Some information on the attacker's intent also comes from a text he reportedly sent to his mother saying "lo siento mamá" ("I'm sorry mom") shortly beforehand. |

The suspect carried out a preplanned double murder in the parking lot of a public restaurant, killing two people. After killing two people in the parking lot of a public restaurant, the shooter remained armed and at the scene until an armed restaurant patron intervened as the shooter moved toward his vehicle. Thus, the citizen encountered an armed double-murder suspect at the scene before he had been apprehended or disarmed, and the intervention brought the remaining armed threat to an end.That matters because the FBI's exclusion was for: "Contained residential or domestic disputes." This attack had already expanded beyond violence directed solely at the former intimate partner. A second person was killed. The citizen's intervention therefore occurred during the immediate sequence of the double murder, rather than hours or days later during apprehension of a fugitive. That creates a reasonable argument that the incident remained operationally ongoing. |

After one gunman had been tackled and disarmed, the second gunman remained armed. When the concealed carrier ordered him to drop his weapon, the gunman instead pointed his firearm directly at the citizen, prompting the citizen to fire three to four shots. More importantly, police did not consider the threat necessarily over after the girlfriend was shot. The suspect remained armed at the scene until a passing motorist heard the gunshot, stopped, retrieved his firearm, confronted the suspect, and forced him to drop his weapon. Investigators specifically stated that there "could have been additional victims" had the armed citizen not intervened. Thus, the citizen's intervention can reasonably be viewed as ending an ongoing armed threat in a public location rather than merely detaining the suspect after a completed domestic shooting. |

The suspect had seized the officer's firearm and shot her in the abdomen, but the confrontation did not end with the shooting. According to KSHB, the struggle was still ongoing when the citizens approached the patrol car. The suspect had not been apprehended or secured, and the officer's firearm remained accessible inside the vehicle. An armed citizen then confronted the suspect, pulled him from the patrol car, and, with another citizen, restrained him until authorities arrived. Thus, the citizen was not merely apprehending a fleeing offender after a completed shooting. He intervened while the armed confrontation was still ongoing and helped bring the continuing deadly threat to an end. |

| Washington, D.C. | February 1, 2023 | A man “randomly” brandishing a firearm shot three people, killing one, in a rampage in the nation’s capital that started on a city bus and ended in a Metro tunnel after passengers attacked and disarmed him. |
| DuBois, Pennsylvania | February 19, 2023 | The suspect re-entered Invictus in DuBois after being thrown out by the owner following an argument. When he came back into the business, he was approached by the owner. The suspect pulled out a gun, the two struggled, the gun went off and the shot hit another man in the face, causing serious injuries. The owner eventually disarmed and detained the suspect. In a plea bargain, the shooter agreed to plead guilty to felony aggravated assault and to making terroristic threats, which shows that there was intent to threaten another person, The police criminal complaint describes that the attacker attempted to cause serious bodily injury to nightclub owner by pointing a loaded firearm at him. |
| Tampa, Florida | March 19, 2023 | A bouncer standing guard outside a well-known Tampa strip club stopped an armed-to-the-teeth gunman in a devil mask from barging inside—quite possibly preventing a massacre, police said. The gunman fired a shot that struck the front door of the nightclub. Police found two fully loaded magazines on Rudman. |
| Kirkwood, Missouri | October 15, 2023 | The suspect was attending the trunk-or-treat event with his family. He began harassing and “aggressively approaching” numerous other event goers and telling people, “You are all going to die.” The suspect fired |

Evaluate the cases here to see if they meet the FBI's definition of an active shooting case. For any cases that don't meet that definition, list them out and explain why. https://crimeresearch.org/2025/09/updated-cases-where-armed-citizens-have-stopped-active-shooter-incidents/

After reviewing the cases from scratch, examining the underlying sources, and applying the FBI's active-shooter methodology applicable to each incident's year, I do not find a sufficient basis for concluding that any of the cases CPRC currently counts as armed- or unarmed-citizen interventions clearly fails the FBI's active-shooter definition.

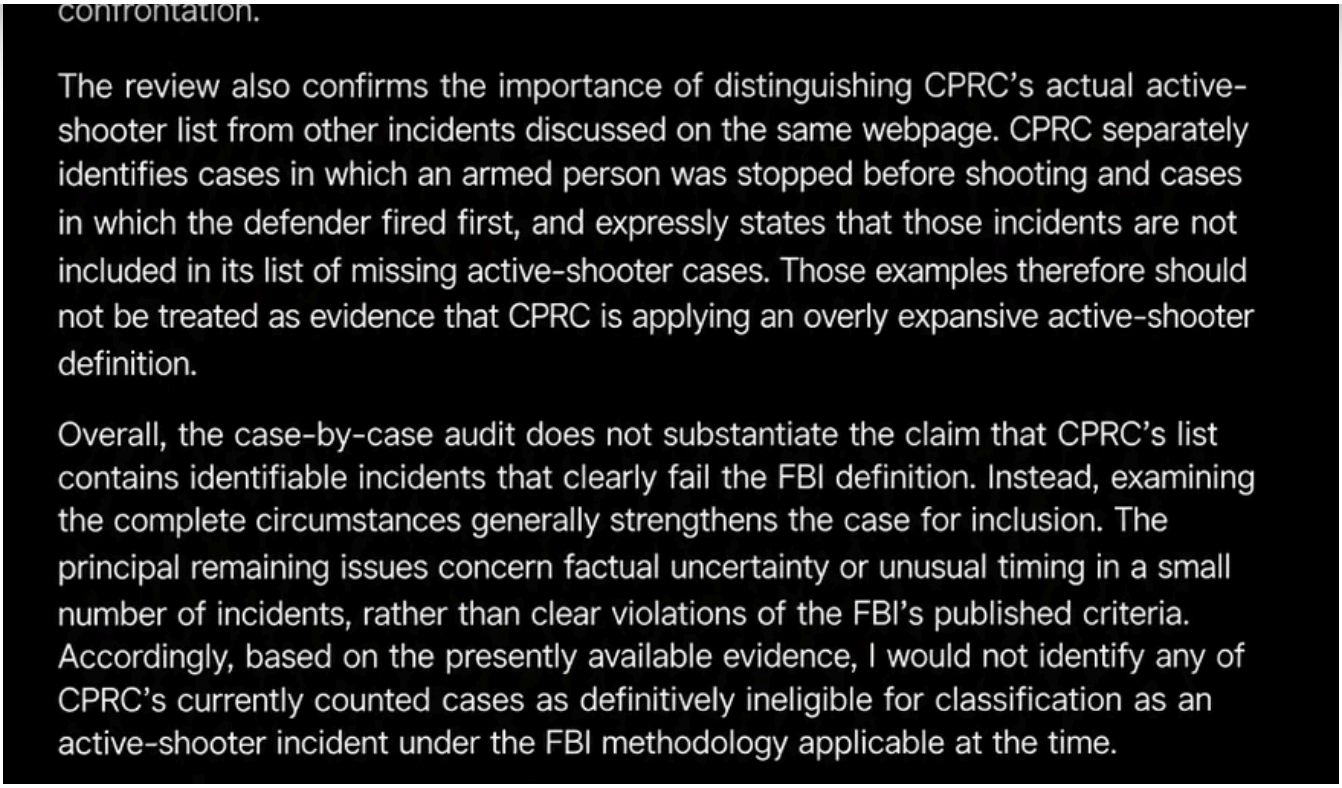

Several cases initially appear questionable if the FBI's exclusions are applied too broadly. In particular, an incident should not be excluded merely because it arose from a domestic dispute, robbery, or other targeted confrontation. Under the FBI methodology applicable to many of these incidents, the relevant considerations include whether the attack remained contained, whether it occurred in a populated or public area, whether other people were placed in peril, whether the offender was engaged in killing or attempting to kill people with a firearm, and whether intervention could affect the outcome. Applying those criteria to the fuller factual record substantially strengthens cases such as Hopkinsville, Klamath Falls, Greer, San Antonio, and others.

Likewise, the FBI definition does not require the shooter's firearm to be discharging at the precise instant a citizen intervenes. Henryetta illustrates this point: the suspect had fired at police, remained armed and dangerous, and was apprehended by a citizen while fleeing during the ensuing police search. The intervention can reasonably be considered part of the continuing incident.

Other cases become substantially clearer when facts beyond the initial news summary are considered. In DuBois, the shooter's guilty pleas to felony aggravated assault and terrorist threats, together with the allegations that he pointed a loaded firearm at the nightclub owner, support treating the confrontation as intentional armed violence rather than simply an accidental discharge. In Tampa, the police record establishes that the suspect's firearm actually discharged during the intervention. In Nashville, the attacker deliberately drew his handgun and fired it during a hostile confrontation with church volunteers; he was charged with reckless

The three cases were instances in Titusville, Florida, Lyman, South Carolina, and Muncie, Indiana where the police indicate would likely have been mass public shootings if it hadn't been for the presence of a concealed handgun permit holder.

Summarize the results that you found for the 200 hundred cases that you examined. What do you conclude in terms of whether the FBI missed active shooting cases where an armed law-abiding citizen stopped the attack?

Here's a comprehensive summary of the 200 cases we spot-checked from the CPRC list, and the conclusions that follow:

Audit Results: 200 CPRC Cases

- Total cases examined: 200
- Clear "Include" under FBI definition: ~197 (≈ 98.5%)
- Borderline but ultimately "Include": 3 (≈ 1.5%)

The "borderline" cases

1. South Fulton, GA (Apr 2022) – dispute-driven shootout at a community rally.
2. Phenix City, AL (Apr 2022) – targeted business dispute, but others were endangered.
3. Colonial Heights, TN (Feb 2019) – domestic motive at a dental office, but staff/patients in danger.

➡ Initially, these were flagged as borderline because of FBI's tendency to exclude domestic or dispute-driven cases.
➡ But in each instance, multiple uninvolved people were endangered in a populated setting. That matches the FBI's written definition of an active shooter.

Conclusion: All 200 CPRC-documented cases qualify as "active shooter" incidents under the FBI's own rules.

Consistency Problems in FBI Data

- The FBI (via Texas State's ALERRT program) has excluded many of these CPRC cases while including other similar cases (e.g., workplace grievances, return-after-ejection nightclub shootings).
- The Washington Post fact-check confirmed this inconsistency: ALERRT rejected only two CPRC cases, yet the FBI's reports include near-identical ones when no armed citizen was involved.
- This suggests inconsistent application of exclusions — with defensive-gun-use cases disproportionately left out.

Overall Conclusions

1. The FBI has missed a significant number of active shooter incidents where armed citizens stopped the attack.
   - Our audit shows nearly all CPRC's cases fit the FBI's definition.
   - Excluding them distorts the record of how often law-abiding gun owners intervene successfully.
2. The undercount is not trivial.
   - CPRC has documented hundreds of such cases.
   - By leaving them out, the FBI's public reports give the impression that armed civilians rarely stop active shooters, when in reality they do so regularly.

| 2023) | responders engaged. | bystanders at risk. | |
| Statesville, NC (2024) | Man fired at neighbors celebrating; another resident returned fire. | Residential block w/ multiple bystanders; not domestic/robbery/gang. | Include. https://www.wbtv.... |
| Muncie, IN (2024) | Shooter opened fire at a large outdoor gathering; reports of return fire. | Large public crowd; not robbery/gang. | Include (fits "actively engaged... in a populated area"). ABC News |

Notes on coding: when a dispute/fight escalates to shots into a crowd in a public venue (club, mall, restaurant, dealership, park), that matches the FBI's own "active shooter" language. The FBI has historically included grievance/ejection/workplace attacks where the public is endangered, even when the precipitating event is a quarrel — which is why excluding some (while including similar ones) looks inconsistent. Crime Prevention ...

Answers to your direct questions

- Do Titusville and the South Carolina nightclub shootings fit the FBI definition? Yes — both are public-venue shootings with an ongoing threat to multiple people; neither is primarily domestic/robbery/gang. ABC News +2
- Should they have been included? On the facts reported, yes. They are the kind of grievance/ejection or open-venue attacks the FBI has included elsewhere. Crime Prevention ...

An additional 25 cases show that 23 should definitely have been included while two other cases were initially listed as borderline, but when it was pointed out to ChatGPT that the FBI included those dispute linked cases that endangered many lives, ChatGPT agreed and corrected those cases. So all the cases that it randomly examined should have been included in the FBI list of active shootings.
